Past Covid: Where does travel stand?

Do I believe that I will travel again? That is a very good question. Am I vaxed? Well, no but will I be in the future? I suspect I will be vaxed, but I'm waiting. Waiting for what? I'm waiting for a better dose. Something tested, tried, and proven. Something people are not complaining about. Something that is not forced. Why are they trying to force vaccinations? In all honesty I don't know. Over 99% of cases don't die. Cancer can't claim that. I'm betting there are many things in this world that can't claim that. Yet, the forcing of it has me believing it's political and not science. Why the need to force if it's good for us?

We seem to forget that vaccinations for the flu season is not a new thing. Yet, the lineup was nonexistent for that. I am positive that the lineups for this vaccination are nonexistent too. Hence the forced direction from authorities. Yet, forced means were not buying it. Something is missing or wrong about this whole thing. Back to the main point of this blog. Will I travel ever again? If I'm forced to take something to travel without it being proven then the answer is no. Will I give my money to sports teams if I'm forced. No, I won't.

A funny thing happened on the way to the pandemic. I was forced to lock down and keep my money. That money sat there for a bit. I have an extremely physical job. As a mailman I walk around 10 miles a day. I took some of that pandemic money and bought a treadmill to offset not working and keep my body limber for work. In the mean time I fell in love with Ifit training on the dang thing. I took more pandemic money and bought runners. Then I decided to spend more on running socks and new clothes as a shrunk. Entertainment money has turned into fitness money.

What does this all mean? Well, if I'm forced to vax just to see a sports game with my money then I'm out. If I'm forced to vax in order travel then I'm out. I will take my money and buy more fitness stuff. Here is the thing. Will the forces of nature convince the world that flues, viruses, and sickness is a normal earthy function and we need not panic? I don't know. Will I part with my money when forced? I do know the answer to that question: no! What sports and travel companies have forgotten within the last two years is whose money they receive. It's not theirs but mine. It's my money. I was willing to give it to them my whole life. Yet, recently I have re-discovered that it is my money. My time and my body. The old entertainment (I did love) do not own me. My body does.

I have always been a runner. I have always loved working out. Yet, I thought that my job was too harsh to do this new hobby full time on the side. Yet, the pandemic offered me a chance to see that my body loves working out even with a physical job. For the first time in my life, I am healthier than I ever thought possible. I never would have bought 20 dollar running socks two years ago. That has changed. I am free to buy workout stuff and new clothes. I feel great. Will I get vaxed just to give that money to corporations that demand I get vaxed? Well, no. I have discovered that I'm very happy running away from them with my body and money.
